

Big Lake Bottom Wildlife Management Area E-Postcard Hunts

Background

Big Lake Bottom Wildlife Management Area (BLBWMA) lies adjacent to the Trinity River and is located approximately 10 miles west of Palestine, Texas in Anderson County. The WMA was purchased beginning in 1990 in an effort to preserve a relict tract of quality bottomland hardwood habitat which is rapidly disappearing in the Post Oak Savannah Ecoregion of Texas. Soils are poorly drained black Kaufman clay, a common soil type in areas that are unprotected from floodwaters and often referred to as “black gumbo mud.”

Although 90% of BLBWMA is characterized as bottomland hardwood forest, the vegetative communities and total habitat qualities differ depending on specific locations within the management area. Dominant vegetative overstory is comprised of overcup oak, sugar hackberry, hickory, willow oak, water oak, cedar elm, water elm and green ash. Bur oak, southern red oak and post oak are common on the few upland terraces. Major understory species include eastern redbud, possum-haw holly, greenbrier, poison oak, rough leaf dogwood, grape and American beautyberry. As a result of the flat terrain the area often times is covered in shallow, slow moving floodwaters, five to 60 days a year. The area is normally inaccessible several times a year for extended periods due to high water or wet soil conditions.
